1 Read the following text about a famous inventor. Then tick T (True) or F (False).

The World Wide Web

Tim Berners-Lee is a British computer scientist who invented the World Wide Web (WWW). He was born on 8th June 1955 in London, England. After school he went to Oxford University where he studied physics*. Then, in 1980, he got a job at the CERN Organisation in Switzerland where he needed to share information with different people in different places. To make this easier he discovered a way of using hypertext, a language for sharing text electronically. The world already knew about the internet as a way for computers to communicate with each other, but Tim Berners-Lee dreamt of combining the idea of the internet with hypertext and making it available* for everyone and easier to use.

After experimenting with different ideas and trying out different methods, he worked out a way to do it and in 1990, with the help of Robert Cailliau, he produced the first version of the World Wide Web, the first web browser and the first web server. It went online in 1991.

In 1994, Berners-Lee founded W3C (World Wide Web Consortium) at the Laboratory of Computer Science (LCS) at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) in Boston. This is an organisation that tries to improve the world wide web. He could have tried to make a lot of money out of his invention, but he decided to make the world wide web widely available to everyone without asking for payment*. Now hundreds of millions of people are using it and it has become part of our daily lives.

In spite of the size and importance of his invention, Berners-Lee is not rich. He's not very materialistic and for many years he was happy to drive a 13-year-old car. He enjoys being in nature and wants to protect it.

He has received many awards for his work. In 2004, the Queen made him a "Sir" and, in 2011, he received the Mikhail Gorbachev Award for "The Man Who Changed the World".
